

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Yewon Ji is a second-year MA student in International Relations at New York University. Her primary academic interest centers on international security, particularly nuclear proliferation and transnational threats, and humanitarian affairs. She got her BA in Political Science from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign in 2006. She is currently an intern at the Center on International Cooperation (CIC) at New York University. Prior to the CIC, she interned with the United Nations Mine Action Service (UNMAS) within the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) at the United Nations Headquarters and the Center for Terrorism and Intelligence Studies (CETIS) in New York, NY.

Daniel Urbankowski received his MA in Politics from New York University in January 2009, where he focused on ethnic and religious conflict, and regionally on the Middle East. Born and raised in Wallington, New Jersey, he received his BA in Political Science and History from Rutgers University in May 2007 and, prior to that, graduated from St. Peter's Preparatory High School in Jersey City, New Jersey. He has worked as an intern for United States Senator Frank R. Lautenberg and most recently, as a Graduate Assistant at the Center on International Cooperation.

Sara Rendtorff-Smith received her M.A. in International Relations from New York University in January 2009. During her graduate studies Sara worked as a consultant on a research project conducted by Bruce Bueno de Mesquita and Alastair Smith, worked as a teaching assistant for Asli Peker, and has completed internships with UNDP's Poverty Group and the Development Research Institute. Alongside her studies, Sara studied Arabic, and in June 2008 she traveled to Cairo, Egypt on a Rotary scholarship to pursue intensive studies of Arabic at American University in Cairo. While in Cairo, she volunteered with a local NGO providing English lessons to refugees coming mainly from the Horn of Africa. It is her dream and motivation to become a successful negotiator of power sharing and peace agreements and to be a contributing party to a final settlement of the Palestinian Question.

Lindsey Leonard received her M.A. in International Relations from New York University in August 2008. During her studies she participated in the Alexander Hamilton Center's Graduate Student Conference, on the "Study of Misappropriation: Why Isn't Aid Reaching the Internally Displaced People in Northern Uganda?" She was also chosen as a junior professional fellow for the United Nations and participated in UN Forums on the "Accountability for Enhancing Effectiveness and Efficiency in the UN" and "The Governance Dimension of the MDGs in Africa." She received her B.A. magna cum laude in Political Science from Ouachita Baptist University in 2005. Currently she is working as a marketing director at Inspiration Boulevard in Atlanta.